Mid-Year Silent Reading Assessment

The Viking Settlement at L’Anse aux Meadows

Until just over fifty years ago, no one knew if the Vikings had sailed to North America. Some people thought they had. Many others were not convinced. That changed in 1960. In that year, a team from Norway made a remarkable discovery. They found Viking houses on the coast of Canada.

The team leader was Helge Ingstad. He had made lots of money as a lawyer. In his twenties, he quit his job. He spent a few years living with the native people of northern Canada. These people are sometimes called Eskimos. Later, Ingstad wrote a book about his time with the Eskimos.

Ingstad’s book was popular in Norway. A young woman named Anne Stine read it. She liked the book so much she wrote the author a letter. Ingstad wrote back. He and Stine traded letters. Eventually, they met. The two of them fell in love and got married.

The Ingstads were both interested in the Vikings. They had read the sagas, the collections of old stories about the Vikings. The sagas told of Erik the Red and Leif Erikkson. They told of Erikkson’s voyage from Greenland and his discovery of a land he called Vinland.

But were the stories in the sagas true? If they were, where exactly was Vinland? At the time, nobody knew.

Helge Ingstad studied the subject. He figured Vinland must have been somewhere on the coast of Canada. The northern tip of Newfoundland sticks out into the Atlantic Ocean. Ingstad thought Erikkson might have bumped into it. He began visiting various villages along the coast.

For a while, Ingstad found nothing of interest. Then, one day he spoke to an old fisherman. The man told him of some old houses near the town of L’Anse aux Meadows. The locals called the houses “the old Indian village.” He led Ingstad to the site. Nobody had lived in the houses for many years. They were badly overgrown. Even so, Ingstad was intrigued. He did not think the houses were Native American houses. He thought they might be Viking houses.

Ingstad decided to set up an archaeological dig. Ingstad happened to know a well-trained archaeologist—his wife Anne.

The Ingstads put together a team. Then, they began to excavate the site.

They found several houses. These houses did not look like Native American houses. They looked like Viking houses. The Ingstads had seen similar houses in Iceland and Greenland. They were very excited.

The team kept digging. They found more evidence that the site was a Viking settlement. They found a piece of jewelry. It was a pin used to pin on clothing. Pins like it had been found in Viking graves elsewhere.

They also found a spindle whorl—a tool used to spin cloth. This was important. In Viking times, spinning was done by women. The spindle whorl was evidence that women lived in the settlement as well as men.

The Ingstads wanted to find out how old the houses were. To do this, they used a method called carbon dating.
Here is how carbon dating works. All living things absorb the element carbon-14. (You are absorbing some right now!) When these living things die, the carbon-14 in their bodies begins to decay, or break down. It decays at a steady rate over a long period of time. Scientists can find out how much carbon-14 is left in an animal bone. Then, they can make an estimate of when the animal died. If there is a lot of carbon-14 left, that means the animal died recently. If there is very little carbon-14 left, that means the animal died long ago. This method also works for materials like wood, leather, and paper.

The Ingstads had carbon dating tests done on things they found at the site. The results were amazing. The results suggested that the settlement was probably built around the year 1000. That is when Leif Eriksson made his voyage! It meant the site might have been founded by Eriksson himself. This was the most exciting news yet!

Today, almost all historians agree that the houses the Ingstads dug up were built by the Vikings. Many believe that L’Anse aux Meadows is Vinland. Others are not so sure. Even if it is not Vinland, it is an important find. It tells us that the Vikings explored North America—and settled the land—almost 500 years before Christopher Columbus. We can be confident of this now because of the Ingstads and their work.

The Oseberg Ship

It was August 8, 1903. Professor Gabriel Gustavson was working in his office at the University of Oslo in Norway.

Knock, knock!

Gustavson went to the door. A stranger was standing there. He was a farmer from Oseberg, a village not far from Oslo. He told Gustavson he had discovered something. It was the remains of an old ship. It looked very old. Would Gustavson come out and have a look at it?

Gustavson agreed to have a look. A few days later, he went out to the farm. What he saw stunned him. The farmer had discovered a Viking burial mound, with a well-preserved Viking ship. It was an amazing discovery.

The next summer, Gustavson came back with a team of men. He and his helpers dug up the ship. They sent the pieces back to Oslo.

In Oslo, Gustavson and his team began reassembling the ship. Each piece of wood was steamed. Then, it was pressed back into its original shape. The ship was reassembled, piece by piece. Eventually, it was put on display in a museum. You can still see it today.

Scientists believe the Oseberg ship was built 1,200 years ago, around the year 820. It was placed in a grave several years later, in the year 834.

The Vikings buried kings and queens in large burial mounds filled with grave goods. They believed the dead could use the grave goods in the afterlife. They thought a boat would be very useful. The dead could use the boat to sail to the land of the dead.

The Oseburg burial mound contained two bodies. Both were women. One was about 60 to 70 years old. The other was 20 to 30. The older woman seems to have been the more important of the two. The younger woman may have been a slave or a servant.

The older woman seems to have suffered from severe arthritis. We do not know who she was. But she must have been important. An ordinary person would not have been given such a fancy burial.

The Oseberg ship is long and narrow. It is about 21 meters long. It is only 5 meters wide. It is made of oak planks. There are 15 fixtures for oars on each side. It would have been rowed by 30 rowers, each pulling on an oar. There was also a mast that could hold a sail.

The bow and stern of the boat are decorated with wood carvings. Some of the carvings are very beautiful.

Scientists think that the Oseberg ship was built before the Vikings perfected their shipbuilding skills. Some other ships built a little later seem to have had a better design.

In the 1980s, some craftsmen in Norway built a full-size replica of the Oseberg ship. They took the ship out for a test voyage. It was a windy day. The ship tipped over and sank.

The ship was raised from the bottom. A few adjustments were made. It proved to be more seaworthy on the next few voyages, but eventually it sank again.

If Leif Erikkson had sailed in a ship like the Oseberg ship, he might not have made it to North America. He might have tipped over. The ship he sailed in one hundred and eighty years later was a better ship for sailing on the ocean.

Loki’s Children

One day, Odin looked down from Asgard into Jotunheim, the land of giants. He saw Loki playing with three monsters. The first was a long, scaly serpent and the second was a rabid wolf. The third was an old hag who was white as snow on one side of her face and black as night on the other. These monsters were the children of Loki and his wife in Jotunheim, Angraboda.

Odin shook his head with disgust.

“Loki, the father, is bad,” he said. “Angraboda, the mother, is worse. Just look at their children! I shudder to think what terrible deeds those monsters may commit.”

Odin thought about destroying Loki’s children, but he felt it would not be right to do this. He and Loki were blood brothers who had sworn an oath of loyalty to each other many years earlier. Odin decided the best thing to do would be to put Loki’s children in faraway places, where they could do no harm.

Odin began with the serpent. He sneaked up and grabbed it below its head so it could not bite him. Then, he ran as fast as he could to the shoreline and cast the writhing beast into the sea.

The serpent sank to the bottom. Then, it began to grow. It grew and grew until at last, it was so large that its body stretched all the way around Midgard, the earth. From then on, the creature was called the Midgard Serpent.
Next, Odin dealt with the old hag, whose name was Hel. Odin sent her to the underworld, the kingdom of the dead, which was then named after her. She lived there from then on in a horrible black palace. The walls of the palace were made of slithering snakes. An old black rooster sat on the roof but never crowed because daybreak never came. Sometimes Hel would leave the gate to the underworld open and the dead would roam the earth, haunting the living.

Finally, Odin turned to the wolf, which was called Fenris. Odin put Fenris on a deserted island in the hopes that doing so would be enough to keep the earth safe from the wolf’s terror. But as time passed, Odin began to worry. Fenris grew larger and larger. Eventually, Fenris was so large and so dangerous that Odin decided it was not enough to just keep him on the island. He would have to be chained up so he could not try to escape.

Odin asked the dwarves to make a magic chain. Using all their skill, the dwarves made the chain so strong that nothing in the world could break it.

Odin knew Fenris would never agree to wear the chain. Thus, Odin decided he had to try to trick the wolf. He and some other gods went to visit Fenris on the island. They took the chain with them.

“Fenris,” Odin said, “Thor tells me you are very strong and powerful. I wonder if you could help us break this chain. It was made by dwarves and it too is very strong. I tried to break it myself but I could not do it. Tyr tried to break it, and so did Thor, but neither of them could do it. It seems that none of us is strong enough to break it. But perhaps, with your strength and power, you could break it. Would you be willing to try?”

Fenris was vain. He longed to show the gods how strong and powerful he was and make them fear him. But he was also worried. He thought the gods might be trying to trick him. He was wary of Odin’s request.

“You may place the chain around my neck,” Fenris said, “and I will try to break it but only on one condition. One of you must place a hand in my mouth, as a sign of good faith. That way, I will know you are not trying to trick me.”

Odin’s son Tyr stepped forward. He knew what was likely to happen. He knew he could lose his hand. He was willing to risk his hand to protect the world from the horrible wolf. He placed one hand in the wolf’s foaming mouth.

The other gods looped the chain around the wolf’s neck. Then, they fastened the chain to a giant rock.

Fenris tried to break the chain. He howled and growled. He tugged on the chain with all his might. But the chain was too strong. He could not break it.

“I give up,” he said at last, exhausted from putting forth so much effort. “No one can break this chain. Now, let me go.”

“No!” said Odin. “We will not let you go. You can lie here until the world comes to an end!”

Fenris realized he had been tricked. He bit down hard on Tyr’s hand, which was still in his mouth, and bit it right off.

Then, Fenris howled and howled, knowing there was no way for him to escape from the island or the chain wrapped around his neck.

STOP
Dear Family Member,

Please help your child succeed in spelling by taking a few minutes each evening to review the words together. Helpful activities for your child to do include: spelling the words orally, writing sentences using the words, or simply copying the words.

Spelling Words

This week, we are reviewing all five spelling patterns for /k/. Your child learned to spell words with the /k/ sound in second grade, so this should be a review. On Friday, your child will be assessed on these words.

Students have been assigned two Challenge Words, example and mountain. Challenge Words are words used very often. The Tricky Words do not follow the spelling patterns for this week and need to be memorized.

The Content Word for this week is Loki. This word is directly related to the material that we are reading in Gods, Giants, and Dwarves. The Content Word is an optional spelling word for your child. If your child would like to try it but gets it incorrect, it will not count against him or her on the test. We encourage everyone to stretch themselves a bit and try to spell this word.
The spelling words, including the Challenge Words and the Content Word, are listed below:

1. coarse

3. anchor
4. calendar
5. occupy
6. stomach

Student Reader

The chapters your child will read this week in Gods, Giants, and Dwarves include Norse myths. Myths are fictional tales that often include gods and goddesses with supernatural powers. Ancient people often used myths to explain natural events for which they did not have a scientific explanation. Be sure to ask your child each evening about what he or she is learning.

Students will take home text copies of the chapters in the Reader throughout the unit. Encouraging students to read a text directly related to this domain-based unit will provide content and vocabulary reinforcement. Your child will also bring home a copy of the glossary for use in reading the text copies to family members. The bolded words on the text copies are the words found in the glossary.

Odin, the father of the Norse gods, sat at the dinner table. By his side sat two ravens. Their names were Thought and Memory. They were Odin’s flying spies. Each day, they left Asgard, the home of the gods, and flew around the world. Each night, they flew back to Asgard to tell Odin what was happening in the world.

On this day, the ravens did not have much to report. Things were quiet on Earth.

Odin tossed the ravens some crumbs. He cut off pieces of meat and fed them to two wolves who sat at his feet.

Odin himself did not eat. He never ate. He sipped some mead from a goblet. Then, he pushed the goblet away and scanned the room with his one good eye. He spotted two of the Valkyries who worked for him as serving maids. He nodded to them. The Valkyries began to clear the table.

Odin stood up to leave, but just then, he heard a clap of thunder, the snorting of goats, and the skidding of a cart. He knew that could only mean one thing: his son Thor was arriving in his goat-drawn cart.

Sure enough, Thor, the mighty god of thunder, burst into the room. His wife Sif trailed behind him, her head covered with a veil. Thor was enraged. The veins on his forehead bulged. There was fire in his eyes.

“It’s an outrage!” said Thor. “An outrage! This time Loki has gone too far!”

“What’s the matter?” Odin asked.

“Her hair!” shouted Thor. “That scoundrel has cut off her hair!”

“What’s her hair?” Odin asked.

As he said this, Sif let her veil fall to her shoulders. Odin looked at Sif and blinked. Her hair—her long, golden hair, which every goddess in Asgard admired—was gone. It had been cut off. There was nothing left but a few tufts of yellow stubble.

“Look at me!” shrieked Sif. “I am hideous! I will go live with the dwarves!”

Sif’s Golden Hair
Without my hair, I am as ugly as the ugliest dwarf!"

Odin frowned. He turned to Thor and said, “Are you sure it was Loki who did this?”

Odin asked the question, but even as he did so, he felt there was no need to ask. It had to be Loki. It was always Loki. Whenever something was stolen, whenever things went awry, whenever any bad deed was done, it was always Loki who was behind it.

Odin blamed himself. It was he who had invited Loki to join the gods in Asgard. Loki was not a god. He was a giant who could change his appearance. Loki had been a constant source of problems ever since.

“I will kill him!” shouted Thor. “I will—”

“Be calm,” said Odin. “I will deal with Loki.”

Odin called an assembly of the gods. He summoned Loki as well.

When Loki arrived, he saw the stern look on Odin’s face. He saw that Thor was steaming mad, clutching at his hammer, barely holding back his temper. Loki saw that lies would do him no good this time. He knew he would have to admit what he had done. He bowed his head.

“You will restore Sif’s hair!” said Odin, in a booming voice. “I know not how it is to be done, but you will do it. I require it of you!”

Loki nodded.

Loki and the Dwarves

Loki came up with a plan to replace Sif’s hair.

He left Asgard. He went down the Rainbow Bridge to Earth. Then, he went down below Earth to Nidavellir, the realm of the dwarves.

The dwarves were short creatures who lived deep underground. They were grouchy, surly, and unpleasant. However, they were master craftsmen. They could make just about anything.

Loki was a smooth talker. He knew how to flatter the dwarves. He went to their workshop and watched them work.

“What fine work you do!” Loki said. “Why, I’ve never seen better craftsmen! How do you do it?”

The dwarves smiled. (Who does not like to be praised?)

Loki went on with his flattery.

“You must be the best blacksmiths in the world,” he said. “Your work is amazing, but there is only so much blacksmiths can do. I have a task that I fear is too hard even for you.”

The dwarves stopped banging on their anvils and looked up.

“Too hard for us?” said one of them. “I think not! There is nothing that we cannot make!”

“Could you make golden hair as beautiful and fine as Sif’s hair?”

“We can make it!” shouted the dwarves.

Make it they did. They grabbed a bar of gold and heated it in their forge. Then, they began banging away at it with their hammers. They stretched the bar into tubes. Then, they stretched the tubes into threads. They beat on the golden threads with tiny hammers until they were as fine as real hair.

The dwarves worked day and night for a week. When the hair was finished, it was a wonder to behold. It glittered and shone like gold, but it was soft to the touch, like real hair.

Loki had what he needed. He could have gone straight back to Asgard, but he was very clever. He knew he had angered Odin and Thor. He decided to trick the dwarves into making presents for them.

“This hair is amazing!” he said. “You are truly masters of your trade. But surely there are some things that even you cannot make.”

“There is nothing we cannot make!” said the dwarves.

“Could you make a spear so fine it never misses its target?”

“We can make it!” shouted the sooty, squinty-eyed little men.

Make it they did. A week later, the dwarves handed Loki a silver spear. Loki tested it and found that it never missed its target.

“Astonishing!” said Loki. “You are not tradesmen, really. You are artists! But surely there are some things that even the finest artist cannot create.”

“There is nothing we cannot make!” said the dwarves.

“Could you make a boat that can sail in the air as well as on the sea—a boat that can be folded up and carried in a pocket?” Loki asked.

“We can make it!” cried the confident little blacksmiths.

Make it they did. A week later, Loki left Nidavellir with the golden hair, the silver spear, and the magical boat.

Loki went up from the underground world of the dwarves. He passed Earth and made his way up the Rainbow Bridge. Heimdall, the guardian, saw him and let him pass.

Odin called a meeting of the gods.

Loki placed the golden hair on Sif’s head. It was beautiful. Sif was delighted.

Next, Loki gave Odin the silver spear.

Odin was pleased with his present. He convinced himself that Loki was not so bad after all.

Next, Loki gave Thor the magical boat. Thor had never liked Loki. Many times he had longed to pound him to pieces. But even he had to admit that the magic boat was a splendid gift.

So Loki made peace with the gods and all was well in Asgard—at least for the moment.

The Surprise Party

Mother and I had planned and prepared all day, making sure that everything was ready for a special supper because it was Grandma’s birthday today. Grandma was coming for supper because she always came for supper on Sundays and it was Sunday. What she didn’t know was that it was going to be a special Sunday because Mother and I had kept the party a big secret! I can’t wait to see the look on her face when she arrives and we all shout, “Surprise!” Because I love her so very much, seeing her happy will make my day! I just know this will be the best Sunday ever because Grandma will be surprised and will open her presents. Because she is fifty years old today, I wrapped up fifty small pictures I had drawn for her, one for each year she has been alive!

Example: Why were Mother and I planning and preparing all day?

Mother and I were planning and preparing all day because it was Grandma’s birthday.

Stolen Thunder

Thor had a hammer that he carried with him everywhere. It was called Mjöllnir [MYOEL-neer].

Mjöllnir was a magical weapon. It had been crafted by the dwarves in their underground workshop. When Thor threw the hammer, it would sail through the air and strike its target. There would be a flash of lightning and a boom of thunder. Then, the hammer would fly back to Thor’s hand like a boomerang.

Thor loved his hammer. He never went anywhere without it. He even slept with it. The first thing he did when he got up in the morning was grab Mjöllnir.

But one morning, Thor woke up and found that Mjöllnir was gone. He looked everywhere but could not find it.

“Loki!” said Thor. “Loki has stolen my hammer!”

Thor found Loki. He took him by the throat and lifted him up so that his legs dangled in the air.

Loki could barely breathe.

“I... did... not... take... it,” he stammered.

“Liar!” roared Thor.

Thor glared at Loki and waited for the truth to come out. However, Loki said nothing.

Thor waited a little longer. Still, Loki said nothing.

Thor was puzzled. He began to think maybe Loki was telling the truth this time. (Every so often, Loki did tell the truth.)

Thor set Loki down. He went to speak with Odin.

Odin sent his two ravens out. They flew around the world and came back with a report.

“It was Thrym, the giant,” the ravens said. “He stole the hammer.”

Thrym was a giant who was quite ugly but very rich.

Odin sent Loki to speak with Thrym.

Loki made the long journey to the world of the giants.
Thrym greeted him with a smile.
“Hello, Loki,” he said. “How are the gods today?”
“They are not well,” said Loki. “Someone has taken Thor’s hammer.”
“What a pity!” said Thrym, but he did not seem too upset.
Loki did not mince words. “Was it you?” he asked.
Loki expected Thrym to deny it, but that is not what happened.
“Yes!” said Thrym. “I stole the hammer! I have buried it six miles underground, where no one can ever find it!”
Thrym paused briefly to cackle and enjoy his own villainy. Then, he spoke again.
“Tell Thor he will never see his hammer again—unless...”
“Unless what?” Loki asked.
“Unless Freya will agree to marry me,” said Thrym.
“Not likely,” said Loki. “She’s married already, you know.”
“What do I care?” said Thrym.
“It will never happen,” said Loki.
“Then, I will keep Thor’s hammer,” said Thrym. “No Freya, no hammer!”
Loki went back and told the gods that Thrym had stolen the hammer.
“He says he will give it back, on one condition,” Loki reported.
“What is that?” Odin asked.
“If Freya will agree to marry him.”
“What?” said Freya. “I will never marry that disgusting beast! Never!”
Odin was very wise. He had drunk from the famous Well of Wisdom. He had even traded one of his eyes in order to get more wisdom. But, even with all this wisdom, he was not sure how to get Thor’s hammer back.
“What shall we do?” Odin asked the other gods. “How shall we get Thor’s hammer back?”
There was a long silence. None of the other gods seemed to know what to do either.

Dear Family Member,

Please help your child succeed in spelling by taking a few minutes each evening to review the words together. Helpful activities for your child to do include: spelling the words orally, writing sentences using the words, or simply copying the words.

This week, we are reviewing all seven spelling patterns for the /s/ sound. Your child learned to spell words with the /s/ sound in second grade, so this should be a review. On Friday, your child will be assessed on these words.

Spelling Words

Students have been assigned two Challenge Words, during and want. Challenge Words are words used very often. The Challenge Words do not follow the spelling pattern of /s/ and need to be memorized.

The Content Word for this week is scoundrel. This word is directly related to the material that we are reading in Gods, Giants, and Dwarves. The Content Word is an optional spelling word for your child. If your child would like to try it but gets it incorrect, it will not count against him or her on the test. We encourage everyone to stretch themselves a bit and try to spell this word.
The spelling words, including the Challenge Words and the Content Word, are listed below:

1. assembly 12. whistle
2. sunshine 13. subject
3. princess 14. civil
4. universe 15. promise
5. advice 16. glance
6. listen 17. address
7. scent 18. fascinate
8. surly
9. mince
10. central
11. response

Student Reader

The chapters your child will read this week in Gods, Giants, and Dwarves include Norse myths. Myths are fictional tales that often include gods and goddesses with supernatural powers. Ancient people often used myths to explain natural events for which they did not have a scientific explanation. Be sure to ask your child each evening about what he or she is learning.

Students will take home text copies of the chapters in the Reader throughout the unit. Encouraging students to read a text directly related to this domain-based unit will provide content and vocabulary reinforcement. Please remind your child that the glossary can be used for finding the meaning of the bolded words.
A Plan Is Made

The gods sat puzzled. None of them had any idea how to get Thor’s hammer back from Thrym.

At last, Loki spoke.

“Perhaps we could trick Thrym,” he said.

“Go on,” said Odin.

“We can’t send the real Freya,” Loki said. “That’s clear. But maybe we could send a fake Freya.”

“A fake Freya?” said Odin. “What do you mean?”

“I mean one of us could dress up as Freya.”

“I see,” said Odin. “Who did you have in mind?”

“Well,” said Loki, with a grin, “it’s Thor’s hammer. Maybe he should go get it himself.”

“What?” said Thor. “You want me—the great and mighty Thor—to dress up as a girl? Why, you rogue!”

Thor reached out for Loki. He was eager to strangle him. Tyr, the god of war, had to hold him back.

“Relax,” said Loki. “It will just be for a few hours, until we get your hammer back. I will go with you myself. I will dress up and pretend to be your maid of honor.”

But Thor was having none of it.

“Never!” he roared. “I will not do it!”

“Well,” Loki said, “has anyone else got a better plan?”

Silence.

At last, Odin’s wife, Frigga, spoke.

“Loki’s plan just might work,” she said. “It’s our best chance.”

Frigga placed a lovely, white hand on Thor’s massive shoulder.

“Thor,” she said. “I know you don’t like the plan, but would you do it for me—and for Freya?”

Thor grumbled and groaned, but in the end he agreed.

“It’s just for a few hours,” Odin said, patting Thor on the back. “A man can stand anything for a few hours.”

The gods sent a message to Thrym. Thrym wrote back. He announced that the wedding would take place in eight days.

Eight days later, the gods were hard at work getting Thor ready.

“Pull!” shouted Frigga.

“I’m pulling as hard as I can!” replied Tyr.

Thor was barrel-chested and muscular. It was not easy fitting him into Freya’s clothing. Tyr and Loki had already spent ten minutes trying to tighten the waist-strings on Freya’s corset.

“Why did I let you fools talk me into this?” said Thor.

“Take a deep breath,” said Loki.

Thor took a breath. Then, Loki and Tyr began yanking on the corset strings.

“You’re right,” said Loki. “Let’s hope Thrym likes a full-figured woman.”

Eventually the gods got Thor into his corset. They brought him a fancy white dress and dainty white shoes.

They fitted him with veils that covered his face and concealed his thick, red beard.

Loki got dressed as well.

Freya came to put on the finishing touch. She took off the famous golden necklace she always wore and placed it around Thor’s neck.

At last Thor and Loki were ready. Freya called for her chariot, which was pulled by two cats. Thor and Loki stepped in. The cats mewed and the chariot lurched forward. Thor and Loki were off on their excellent adventure.
The Wedding Feast

When his wedding arrived, Thrym was as happy as a giant could be.

When he saw Freya’s chariot approaching, he felt his heart racing. He had been madly in love with Freya for years. He did not think he would ever get her to marry him. But now it seemed that his dreams were coming true.

“Welcome, fair bride!” he called out.

Thor and Loki stepped out of the chariot.

Thrym came forward. He tried to welcome his bride with a kiss, but Loki pushed him away.

“Not yet!” Loki said, in his most girlish voice. “Not until you are married!”

Thrym led his guests to a table. They sat down to enjoy the wedding feast.

Thor was hungry. He ate a whole tray of snacks. He ate eight big salmon. He gobbled down half the ox Thrym’s servants had roasted. He washed it all down with three barrels of mead. When he was done, he belched loudly.

“Urrrrrrp!”

Thrym was taken aback.

“Goodness!” he said. “I have never seen a woman eat so much or belch so loudly.”

Loki saw the danger.

“Well, you see,” Loki explained, “ever since Freya heard she was to marry you, she has been so excited that she has not had a bite to eat—or a drop to drink. For eight days she has fasted and thought only of you!”

“Ah,” said Thrym. “Well, then it’s no surprise she’s hungry. Let her eat as much as she wants, the sweet darling! Tell her that her suffering is almost over: she will not have to wait for me much longer!”

Thrym sat next to his bride. He tried once more to steal a kiss. He started to lift up her top veil, but quickly dropped it.
“Why do her eyes burn like raging fires?” he asked.

“Oh,” said quick-thinking Loki, “that is because she has not slept these past eight nights. She sat up the whole time, thinking of you!”

“Ah,” said Thrym. “She is indeed a thoughtful one! I am sorry to have kept you waiting so long, fair one!”

Loki changed the subject.

“Is the wedding present ready?” he asked.

“Yes,” said Thrym.

“Perhaps you will go and get it,” squeaked Loki.

“I will, indeed,” said Thrym.

When Thrym wandered off, Thor growled beneath his veil, “Grrrrrr! I will kill the villain!”

“Hush!” said Loki. “Not until we have the hammer.”

Thrym returned with Thor’s hammer. He set it down next to Thor.

“Ooo!” said Thor, in his best girlish voice. “It’s so big! May I touch it?”

“If it pleases you, fair one,” said Thrym.

“It pleases me,” said Thor, still using his girlish voice. Then, lifting the hammer above his head and bursting out of his wedding dress, he called out in a voice like thunder, “IT PLEASURES ME GREATLY!”

Boom! Smash! Crash! Thor threw his hammer every which way. Five minutes later, Thrym and all of his servants lay dead on the ground.

Loki and Thor went back to Asgard. There they told their story to the gods. For three days and three nights, the gods ate and drank to celebrate the return of Thor and his hammer.

Part 1: Read the following story and follow your teacher’s instructions.

Paula’s Morning

“Paula! Paula!” called Mother, “Get up!” Paula looked at the clock and jumped out of bed. It was 8:15 and Paula knew that was very late. She looked out the window. None of the other children were waiting at the bus stop. “Oh no! I must have missed my bus!” sighed Paula.

Paula quickly showered, brushed her teeth, grabbed her backpack, and raced downstairs. Mother was waiting to drive her to school.

When Paula arrived at school, classes had already started. That’s when she realized her stomach was growling. Not only was she late for school, she had missed breakfast. Sadly, she hurried to her classroom. She hoped Mrs. Jones wouldn’t be angry with her.

She quietly entered the classroom and Mrs. Jones gave her a big smile and said, “Oh, Paula! We’re so glad you’re here today!” Paula knew it was going to be a good day after all.

Balder, the Beautiful

Balder, one of the sons of Odin and Frigga, was the god who was most loved. He was beautiful, but he was also kind and friendly. He always had a smile on his face and the other gods smiled when they saw him. Everyone loved Balder—everyone except Loki.

One day, Loki noticed that nobody was paying any attention to him. They were too busy looking at Balder. Loki felt a great hatred welling up inside himself. He began to think about how he might get rid of Balder. He knew it would not be easy, because Balder’s mother, Frigga, had gone out of her way to make sure her son was safe.

It had all started many years earlier, when Balder was young. One night Balder had a nightmare. He dreamed of his own death. But the dream was foggy and he could not tell how he died.

He told his mother, Frigga, about the dream. Frigga was frightened. She worried that the dream was a sign of things to come. She loved her son and wanted to protect him. She went to Odin and told him about the dream.

“Is Balder in danger?” Frigga asked.

“I will look into it,” Odin said.

Odin sent his two ravens out. They came back with alarming news.

“Hel, the goddess of the underworld, is making preparations,” said one of the ravens.

“She is preparing to receive one of the gods in the kingdom of the dead,” said the other.

“Which one?” asked Odin.

“That is more than we know,” said the ravens.

When Frigga heard this, she decided to take action. She decided that she would talk to everything in the world and make each thing promise to do her son no harm.

Frigga went and spoke to the rocks.
“Rocks,” she said, ”promise me you will do no harm to my son, Balder.”

“We will not fall on him,” said the rocks. “We promise.”

Frigga spoke to the water.

“Water,” she said, ”promise me you will do no harm to my son, Balder.”

“I will not drown him,” said the water. “I promise.”

Frigga kept going. She spoke to all of the animals and made them promise to leave Balder alone. She spoke with the trees as well.

Loki knew what Frigga had done. He knew there was almost nothing that could harm Balder. Many times he had watched the gods play a game. They would throw rocks at Balder and watch the rocks bounce off. Sometimes they even shot arrows at him. The arrows broke into pieces and fell to the ground at Balder’s feet. The gods laughed and laughed. But Loki did not laugh.

“There must be something that will not bounce off him,” Loki said. “I will find out what it is.”

Loki disguised himself as an old woman. He went to Frigga.

“Frigga,” Loki said. “I have heard rumors. I have heard that your son Balder is in danger. I am a mother myself. I wanted to warn you, mother to mother.”

“Thank you,” said Frigga, “but you need not worry about Balder. I have spoken with everything that might harm him. I have made them all promise not to harm him.”

“Has everything sworn to do him no harm?” Loki asked.

“Everything,” said Frigga. “Well, almost everything. When I was talking to the oak tree, I spotted a little sprig of mistletoe growing on the oak. I was about to ask it to promise not to harm Balder, but I decided not to bother. What could mistletoe possibly do to anyone? It’s such a tiny little plant! It hasn’t even got roots of its own, you know. It grows on other trees and clings to them, as helpless as a baby clinging to its mother!”

“Yes,” said Loki, “what could mistletoe do?”

But as he nodded his head in agreement, he was thinking, “Mistletoe will do much!”

The Death of Balder

Mistletoe was the only thing that had not sworn to protect Balder. When Loki found this out, he went and got a sprig of mistletoe. He cut the mistletoe into the shape of an arrow.

Then, he went to find Balder.

He found Balder and the other gods playing their favorite game. They were tossing things at Balder and laughing as they bounced away.

But there was one god who sat apart and did not join in the game. It was one of Balder’s brothers, a god named Hod.

“Hod,” said Loki, “why are you just sitting there? Why don’t you join in the fun?”

“Loki,” said Hod, “you know I’m blind. How can I throw things at Balder when I can’t even see him?”

“Here,” said Loki, taking Hod by the hand. “I will help you. Place this arrow on the bow. I will point you in the right direction.”

Loki guided Hod into position and told Hod to shoot the arrow. The sprig of mistletoe sped through the air, and, to everyone’s amazement, struck Balder in the chest. Balder fell to the ground.

“What has happened?” cried Hod. “Did the arrow bounce off? Was it funny? What are you doing, brother? Are you playing at being dead?”

But Balder was not playing. He was really dead.

Loki smiled an evil smile. Then, he sneaked away.

When Frigga heard, she was in despair. She cried and raved.

“I will not let my son go to the underworld!” she swore. “I will not let Hel have him!”

The gods sent Hermod [hær-mood], another of Balder’s brothers, to talk to Hel, the goddess of the underworld. Odin loaned Hermod his eight-legged steed, Sleipner [slep-neer].

Hermod rode to the underworld.

Hel said that the gods could have Balder back—but only if every living thing in the world mourned for him.

Hermod mounted Sleipner and rode back to tell the gods.

Odin sent word: all things were to mourn for Balder.

Throughout all the halls of Asgard, the gods mourned for Balder.

Tyr went to Valhalla, where the bravest men from Earth feasted, waited upon by the Valkyries.

“Warriors!” Tyr called. “Valkyries! Hear me! Odin asks that you all join us in mourning for Balder.”

All the men on Earth mourned. The animals mourned. The plants mourned, too.

All things mourned for Balder—all except for Loki. He disguised himself as an old lady and appeared before Hermod.

“Good day, old lady,” said Hermod. “I trust you will join us in weeping for Balder?”

“I will not,” said Loki. “What do I care for Balder? Let Hel have him!”

That was it. The old lady had refused to mourn for Balder. Hel refused to let him return to the world of the living.

The gods placed Balder in a boat. Then, they set the boat on fire and shoved it out on the water.

As the flames rose into the sky, Frigga wept for the loss of her child. Her tears flowed freely, but tears would not bring Balder back. Nothing could bring him back.

Loki’s Punishment

In time, the gods found out what Loki had done. They learned that it was Loki who had visited Frigga in disguise and found out about the mistletoe. It was Loki who had made the arrow and convinced blind Hod to shoot it at Balder. It was Loki, disguised as an old woman, who had refused to weep for Balder and kept him from returning to the land of the living.

Loki had been in trouble many times before. He had done all sorts of bad things. But he had never done anything quite so evil. The gods had lost all patience with him. Even Odin, who had defended Loki so many times in the past, refused to speak for him. The gods vowed to hunt him down and punish him.

Loki disguised himself as a salmon. He swam in the rivers. The gods tried to catch him but Loki leaped out of their nets and escaped. At last, Thor caught him. He grabbed him in midair. Loki struggled, but Thor held him tight with his powerful hands.

The gods took Loki, who was no longer disguised as a salmon, to a cavern deep underground. They chained him to the rocks. They took a serpent, whose mouth dripped with poison, and fastened it to the roof. Drops of poison fell out of the serpent’s mouth and landed on Loki.

Loki was in terrible pain. The poison dripped all night and all day and each drop stung like a knife wound. Loki, the giant who had lived in Asgard with the gods, writhed in agony on the floor of the cave.

Loki went on suffering until his wife Siguna heard about his troubles. Loki had treated Siguna badly, but she still loved him. She left Asgard and went to live with Loki in the cavern. She stood next to her husband, with a cup in her hand. She caught the drops of poison in the cup to keep them from falling on Loki. Loki still suffered, especially when Siguna had to empty the cup, but his suffering was much reduced.

As Loki lay in the cavern, Siguna whispered to him and soothed him. She reminded him of prophecies they both knew, prophecies about Ragnarok rok] and the fall of the gods.

“For the moment, we are beaten,” she said. “The gods in Asgard rejoice at their triumph over you. But they know that the day is coming. They have heard the prophecies. They know as well as you and I that the final battle, the battle of Ragnarok, is coming.”

Siguna paused to toss a cup of poison away. Loki writhed in pain as two drops of poison fell on him. Siguna soothed him and began again.

“When Ragnarok comes, Yggdrasil [eeg-dro-sil], the tree that holds up the world, will tremble. The giants will rise and fight against the gods. A great eagle with a white beak will shriek in the sky. Your son, Fenrir the Wolf, whom they keep chained in a cavern like this one, will break his chains and attack the gods themselves. He will swallow up Odin himself. Meanwhile, Jormungand [yor-mun-gond], the mighty serpent whose body encircles the earth, will do battle with Thor—and Thor will not escape his fate. None of the gods will escape! All of them will die! The sun will turn black. Earth will sink into the sea. The stars will vanish. The world will be destroyed!”

Reminder:

- A complete sentence is a group of words that is a complete thought.
- A complete sentence has a subject and a predicate. The subject (noun) tells who or what the sentence is about. The predicate (verb) tells what the subject is doing.

Identify Topic and Concluding Sentences

Reminder:

- A paragraph is a set of sentences on the same topic.
- A topic sentence is one sentence, usually the first, which tells the main idea or what the paragraph is mostly about.
- A concluding sentence is one sentence, always the last, which wraps up the paragraph. It does not introduce new information. Often, it restates the topic sentence.

Draw a box around the topic sentence of each paragraph. Draw a circle around the concluding sentence.

Food stores are organized in ways that make lots of sense. Around the outside walls of the store are the areas that have counters where people work to prepare food and make things for shoppers to buy. You will find the bakery where the bakers are cooking up wonderful smelling cookies and cakes. Next, workers are making yummy sandwiches and serving salads to shoppers. There is even a person arranging lovely flowers into vases. On the inside rows of the store are the cans and boxes of foods for people to buy. It is so smart the way food stores are laid out!

Puzzles are my very favorite toy to play with when I have nothing else to do. I love the shapes and colors of the pieces and the pictures they make when the puzzle is finished. It is so much fun to connect all of the outside pieces first and then try to fill in the middle. Watching the puzzle picture appear from the pieces as I put the puzzle together is a fun sort of magic. Puzzles fill up my time in very neat ways.
Kittens are the funniest and cutest little animals on earth. I enjoy watching them scamper about, chasing things only they can see. They love to reach out to grab a ball or a piece of yarn and really have fun when their claws catch them. Their little eyes dart from this to that, noticing all that moves around them. I could watch a kitten play for hours and just laugh!
Organize a Paragraph

Reminder:

• A paragraph is a set of sentences on the same topic.
• A topic sentence is one sentence, usually the first, which tells the main idea or what the paragraph is mostly about.
• A concluding sentence is one sentence, always the last, which wraps up the paragraph. It does not introduce new information. Often, it restates the topic sentence.

Select and mark the topic sentence (TS) and concluding sentence (CS) in this paragraph. Then number the remaining sentences that provide supporting details in the correct order.

___ Next, spread the peanut butter on one slice of bread and the jelly on the other slice of bread.

___ Making a peanut butter and jelly sandwich is an easy thing to do.

___ First, get out a plate, the bread, the peanut butter, the jelly, and a knife and place them all on a counter.

___ Before you know it, you are ready to sink your teeth into your yummy sandwich!

___ Put your two pieces of bread together to make a sandwich.
Write Topic and Concluding Sentences

Reminder:

- A paragraph is a set of sentences on the same topic.
- A topic sentence is one sentence, usually the first, which tells the main idea or what the paragraph is mostly about.
- A concluding sentence is one sentence, always the last, which wraps up the paragraph. It does not introduce new information. Often, it restates the topic sentence.

Read the sentences that go with each topic. Then write a topic sentence and a concluding sentence for each topic. Remember to indent the topic sentence.

Topic: Friends

Sally and John are friends of mine because they are nice. They treat me kindly and always ask me to join in their games. Sometimes we play on the swings and sometimes we play ball. Other times we just sit and talk with each other.
Topic: Ice Cream

Chocolate and strawberry are my favorite flavors. I love the way the flavors melt in my mouth and cool me off on a hot day. Sometimes I put toppings like nuts or whipped cream on my ice cream. Ice cream is yummy in my tummy!
Irrelevant Sentences in Paragraphs

Reminder:

• An irrelevant sentence is one that does not relate to the topic sentence in a paragraph.

Each paragraph has a topic sentence, followed by additional sentences. However, there is a sentence that does not relate to the topic sentence. Draw a box around the topic sentence of each paragraph. Cross out the irrelevant sentence in the paragraph. Draw a circle around the concluding sentence.

Apple pie is my favorite dessert. I love the flavor of the cinnamon and the warm apples. I especially love to add a big scoop of icy cold vanilla ice cream on the side. Peach pie is made of peaches. If we had apple pie every night for dessert, I would be a happy person!

When Robin comes to babysit me, I am so thrilled. She reads stories to me and uses so many funny voices when she reads. She likes to play board games with me and sometimes I think she even lets me win. She is such a kind person who is a joy to be around. My brother’s name is Jack. I hope Robin can come again soon to take care of me.
Irrelevant Sentences

Reminder:

- An irrelevant sentence is one that does not relate to the topic sentence in a paragraph.

For each paragraph, draw a box around the topic sentence and cross out the sentence that does not stay on the topic. Circle the concluding sentence.

Fruit comes in all shapes and colors. Some fruits are red and round like apples. Some are yellow and long like bananas. I like playing in the park during the summer. Other fruits, like grapes, are small, green, and sweet. The bright colors of fruits make me want to eat them up!

Keeping my desk neat at school really helps me to do well. My reader and papers are stacked up in piles and my pencils and crayons are in my pencil box. When I need to find something in my desk quickly, it is easy when everything is in its place.
Sentence Order and Titles in Paragraphs

Reminder:

- A paragraph is a set of sentences on the same topic.
- A topic sentence is one sentence, usually the first, which tells the main idea or what the paragraph is mostly about.
- A concluding sentence is one sentence, always the last, which wraps up the paragraph. It does not introduce new information. Often, it restates the topic sentence.

Number the sentences in order to make good paragraphs and add titles to your paragraphs. Make sure you number the topic sentence as first and the concluding sentence as last.

Sally’s new umbrella came in very handy yesterday. As Sally got ready for work that morning, she listened to the weather forecast on the radio, which said rain was likely. Walking out the door, she grabbed her umbrella and then walked to work. About noon, the skies opened up and it began pouring. When it came time to walk home, Sally was very pleased she had listened to the forecast because she walked home under her umbrella, dry and comfortable. Umbrellas sure are handy things to have!

Building a snowman is so easy and so much fun! First, you begin with a small snowball and you roll it around the yard, all the while picking up more and more snow. Your small snowball is quickly a large snowball, large enough to be the base of your snowman. Next, you do the same to make a second large snowball, though one that is just a bit smaller than the first one and you set it on top of the base. Then, you make a third snowball that is the smallest of the three and set it on top of the second snowball. Last, you add a hat, a carrot for a nose, rocks for the eyes and mouth, and sticks for the arms. Your snowman is complete, and wasn’t that a blast?
Painting a landscape scene is difficult but very rewarding. First, you need to choose a setting to paint. Then, you should look carefully at the landscape, noticing the trees, hills, ponds, birds, flowers, and whatever else is a part of your setting. It is wise to paint slowly and not try to complete everything at once. As you paint more and more parts of your setting, you will see the painting nearly come to life. When you have finished, you will have a beautiful landscape scene that you could frame and either hang on your wall or give away as a thoughtful gift. Painting a landscape is a wonderful activity.
