Letter to Family

Unit 3

Our class will begin a unit in language arts in which students will read from the Core Knowledge Reader The Heritage of Ancient Greece and Rome. Students will read this book to learn context and background for literature such as the Iliad, the Odyssey, and Greek myths and William Shakespeare’s play The Tragedy of Julius Caesar.

This unit gives students the opportunity to explore the influence of these two ancient civilizations on our culture today. Through various oral and written activities, students will explore specific cultural, artistic, and civic achievements of ancient Greek and Roman society and the impact of these societies on modern society and our everyday lives.

You are invited to share and explore the reading and activities in this unit with your child. Students may have several homework assignments in which they may ask you or other family members about terms and ideas that are key to the understanding of these early civilizations’ influence on our own culture.

If you have any questions of concerns, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Unit Assessment—The Heritage of Ancient Greece and Rome

Today you will read two selections. After reading the first selection, you will answer several questions based on it. Then, you will read the second selection and answer several questions based on it. Some of the questions have two parts. You should answer Part A of the question before you answer Part B.

“The First Persian War”

The Beginning of the War

1. In the first chapter, you learned that there were a number of Greek city-states on the coast of Asia Minor. About 546 BCE, these city-states came under the control of the Persians, who appointed harsh tyrants to rule each of them.

2. Around 499 BCE, the city-state of Miletus (/mye*lee*tus/) rebelled against Persian rule. The people of Miletus asked the Greeks in other city-states to help them overthrow the Persians. The Spartans refused, but the Athenians agreed to help.

3. In 498 BCE, the Athenians crossed the Aegean Sea to Asia Minor. They conquered the Persian-controlled city of Sardis. When the other Greek city-states in Asia Minor learned of Athens’s victory, they decided to join the revolt against the Persians. The Athenians felt their point had been made, and they went home. Within three years, the Persian king Darius had put down the revolt and regained control of the Greek city-states in Asia Minor.

4. Even though they had regained control of their empire, the Persians were angry with the Athenians. In 490 BCE, the Persians crossed the Aegean Sea to punish the Athenians.

Marathon

5. The Athenians met the Persians on the plain at Marathon, about twenty-six miles from Athens. The Athenians were badly outnumbered, but they decided to attack. The Greek charge was a success. The Persians broke ranks and fled to their ships, and the Greeks cut them down as they ran. By the end of the battle, more than six thousand Persians were dead, while only 192 Greeks had fallen.
6. According to legend, the Greeks ordered a messenger to run to Athens and deliver news of the victory. The messenger ran the twenty-six miles to Athens, gasped out his victory announcement, “Rejoice, we conquer!”, and died of exhaustion. Today, we use the word marathon to refer to a 26.2-mile footrace.

7. Marathon was an extremely important battle. Because the Athenians won, they were filled with self-confidence. They began to think that they were the most powerful of all the Greeks.

Thermopylae

8. The Persians were not yet done with the Athenians, however. In 480 BCE, another Persian army was sent to defeat the Greeks. With an army of more than one hundred thousand men, as well as six hundred to seven hundred ships, the Persian king Xerxes (/zurk*seez/) (486–465 BCE) was determined to conquer all of Greece.

9. Athens and Sparta put aside their disagreements and united against the Persians. They were joined by a few other city-states. The Greeks had between two hundred and three hundred ships and an army of ten thousand men. The army was led by King Leonidas (/lee*ahn*ee*duhs/) of Sparta.

10. The Greeks realized that the longer they could put off a major battle, the better their chances would be. The Greeks decided to delay the Persian army by engaging them at a place called Thermopylae (/thur*mahp*u*l*lee/), about seventy-five miles northwest of Athens. Thermopylae was a narrow pass between high cliffs and the sea. Because of the narrowness of the pass, the Greeks hoped that the Persians would be unable to use their entire army and therefore the Greeks might be able to hold the pass.

11. Things did not turn out exactly as planned. Leonidas and his troops showed great courage and managed to hold the pass for two days, but a native of the area, a man by the name of Ephialtes (/eff*e*awl*teez/), showed the Persians how to use a mountain path to slip around the Greeks. When Leonidas realized what had happened, he ordered the majority of the Greeks to retreat. He and three hundred Spartans stayed behind to hold back the Persian army. All three hundred Spartans died defending the pass.

“Ancient Greece’s Third Great Philosopher”

Aristotle

1. Just as Socrates found a great student in Plato, so Plato found a great student in Aristotle. Aristotle was born around 384 BCE in Macedonia, a country north of Greece. There, his father had been a doctor in the court of the king, Amyntas III. When Aristotle came to Athens, he studied with Plato and stayed at Plato’s school for twenty years before starting his own school, called the Lyceum (/lye*see*um/).

2. Aristotle was greatly influenced both by his father and by Plato. His father had influenced him because, in ancient times, knowledge and skills were passed from father to son. Aristotle’s father was a doctor. As a doctor, he had to take careful note of a patient’s symptoms, or signs of illness, to understand what was making a patient sick. He taught Aristotle to observe people and the world around him carefully.

3. Plato taught Aristotle how important abstract ideals and knowledge are. Aristotle and Plato disagreed and argued with each other from time to time. Aristotle admired Plato greatly, but he once said, “Plato is dear to me, but dearer still is truth.”

A Keen Observer

4. Aristotle also added to the knowledge of his day by collecting and examining insects, animals, and plants. He loved to study animals. He dissected more than fifty different types of animals in order to learn about them.

5. From his years of careful observation, Aristotle realized that there is always more than one way to explain things. For example, an animal could be understood by what it looked like, what it was made of, how it moved, and what it could do. All these different explanations were important and necessary.

6. Aristotle didn’t know it, but by collecting facts, analyzing them, and coming up with theories about his observations, he was developing the basics of scientific research. It’s true that Aristotle didn’t go as far as later philosophers did in testing out his ideas.
Some of his ideas turned out to be wrong. However, he helped move philosophy down the path that would eventually lead to modern science.

7. Like other philosophers, Aristotle also wrote about what it means to lead a good and just life. He believed that the purpose of life is to exercise one’s abilities and virtues reasonably. In his book Nicomachean Ethics, he said, “Virtue, therefore, is a kind of moderation or mean as it aims at the mean, or moderate amount.” Aristotle meant that people should avoid extremes of all kinds. Just as they should eat neither too much nor too little, so they should avoid both evil deeds on the one hand and self-righteousness on the other. Aristotle believed that a truly virtuous person is neither cowardly nor foolishly brave. Aristotle wrote, “It is possible to feel fear, confidence, desire, anger, pity—but to feel these emotions at the right times, on the right occasions, and toward the right people in the right ways is the best course.” This idea of living moderately is sometimes called “the golden mean.”

8. Aristotle also examined politics, or the life of the state. He was interested in determining the best kinds of governments. He wanted to identify which types of governments care for the citizens and not just the rulers. So he inspected dozens of city-states. In his book The Politics, Aristotle wrote that the purpose of the state was to make “the good life” possible for its citizens. The state should create a society in which people could live nobly, honorably, and well.

A Man of His Time

9. Aristotle was a man of his time, however, and he did not believe that all people were equal. He valued men above women. He believed that aristocrats were morally superior to non-aristocrats. He also believed in slavery. He felt that an enslaved person was the property of the slave owner just as much as an animal or a tool.

10. Aristotle’s influence lasted for centuries. During the European Middle Ages, he was so important that he was referred to simply as “the Philosopher.”

11. The great Athenian philosophers, Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle, taught each other to use reason to examine their lives, society, and the world around them. Much of what we know and think about today is based on the principles of reason and observation that began with these philosophers of ancient Greece.
